Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: .300 miles--the penumbra of the desert had fallen and clothed the agriculture of the country with the half shadow of a stock range. From Denver to Salt Lake we found the home of the irrigating ditch. At Ogden we came face to face with the Great American Desert. The G. A. D. is a great fact, not to be marked out by a wave of the map-maker s pencil, or dismissed by a figure of rhetoric. From Ogden westward for 600 miles it stretches out its weary solitude; the grey soil. the sparsely scattered yellow-gray tufts of bunch grass, and the gray sage brush make the desolate landscape--gray, grim and ghastly--stretching away in endless perspective, or reaching to the solitary mountains that lift their heads here and there as if looking to see if the deliverer will ever come! Death and despair hold joint rule over...
