Here is another singular observation. My interne was fortunate enough to observe six individuals, who had contracted the infection from the same source, and this under circumstances which rendered the identical origin of the infection beyond a doubt. The woman, it is true, escaped us, but we were able to study the relation of the affections upon her six victims. Here, as elsewhere, we find the identity of origin indicated by the identity of the primitive symptoms and consecutive manifestations. In fact, listen to what we observed on each of these patients. On the first (we have taken care to classify them in the chronological order of contagion), two indurated chancres on the corona; specific bi-inguinal adenopathy, multiple and Observation.--Six...
