Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: . . . of grass would be produced from its use; and from other results they were fully satisfied that through its use the metropolis might be amply supplied with grass-fed lamb one month earlier than heretofore. Mr. Chadwick read an extract from a letter from Mr. Roe, the former surveyor of this court, stating that by the constant usage of sewage manure he was enabled to cut grass six or seven times a-year.) It was an established fact, that they would be able to reduce the cost of manure to one-sixth its present price, and that an acre of land could be dressed by the aid of a man and a boy in one hour, and so innocuous was it, that in the course of half-an-hour, no person walking over the land could tell that anything had taken place, which was an immense gain in doing away with the question of offensiveness, which removed any objection, in a sanitary point of view, to the use of the manure. Mr. Johnson said there was sufficient sewage poured into the Thames to give 250 tons to an acre, and that amount to 1000 acres per day. Lord Ebrington said that in Edinburgh the use of sewage manure had the effect of raising the value of land from 5s. to 25 per acre. Dr. Southwood Smith bore testimony to the value of this preparation, of which the deodorising fluid destroyed its offensiveness, and at the same time increased its value...
