Excerpt: .as a punishment, to plunder their houses and belongings. Shopmen, justly alarmed, began closing their windows and putting up the shutters, but this availed them very little, because, beginning from that morning, for more than forty-eight hours, Moscow became the centre of the most terrible scenes of plunder, of destruction, and of fire, which no effort of the authorities could stop. In two places, the factories of Zindel and Schrader, events assumed a most serious character. The quarters occupied by the few Germans who were still employed there were entirely plundered, and their owners roughly handled by the infuriated crowd. From that moment, and as if this had been the signal for a general riot, the most regrettable incidents took place. On the 10th of June, at about ten o'clock in the morning, a crowd assembled near the Borowitzky gate; it carried the national colours, and a portrait of the Sovereign. Suddenly someone began singing the hymn, Boge Tsara chrani, others Long live the Emperor! Long live the Russian army! to the sounds of which the mob, now much more numerous, marched to the Red Square and stopped before the monument of Minime and Pogarsky. At the same time another crowd that was much more violent rushed to the bazaar where are the principal shops of Moscow, and at once began plundering them without the least discrimination, throwing out of the windows all the goods it could not destroy at once or put into...
